

Funds Available through Professional Training Opportunities Program (PTOP)

The Northwest Center for Occupational Health and Safety supports occupational health & safety education and training in Alaska, Washington, Oregon, and Idaho. Through the PTOPT program, small grant funding is available to support students from all disciplines and fields of study for projects and activities that address worker health.

Who is eligible? Students (Associates Degree, Undergraduate, Graduate, and Post-Doctoral-seeking from any discipline or field of study) and non-profit staff at community-based organizations interested in developing OHS expertise.

What kind of activities qualify? For their proposal, the applicant may propose a (1) Research project or demonstration; (2) Internship or other learning experiences; (3) Activity or program. All proposals must address health and/or safety issues in the workplace or for working populations

How much money? A maximum of $10,000 (including direct and indirect costs) will be available for each project/recipient, but expect most projects will be for lesser amounts.*

How do I apply? Visit <http://deohs.washington.edu/nwcohs/grants> to read the "Request for Application" (RFA) which contains the full instructions on how to apply.

Send completed applications to Dr. Noah Seixas at ptop@uw.edu by the application deadline of December 1, 2017.

deohs.washington.edu/nwcohs/grants

Grant award recipients are required to attend the Northwest Occupational Health Conference in mid-October 2018 in Bremerton, Washington and make a short presentation about the project's accomplishments. The travel expenses to attend the NOHC should be included in the budget section (in addition to the project related expenses) of the applicant's proposal*

